According to Epic Games' announcement, "top performers will be rewarded at the conclusion of this competition" with free V-Bucks, the internal currency of Fortnite. The top prize is 50,000 V-Bucks, which is worth around $500. The full set of rules for the mode can be found here, but the most important one to note is that players are ranked by their first 50 games in "Solo Showdown," and must play 50 games in the mode to be eligible for prizes. How many V-Bucks to top-ranking players at the close of "Solo Showdown." 1st place: 50,000 V-Bucks2nd—4th place: 25,000 V-Bucks5th— 50th place: 13,500 V-Bucks51st—100th place: 7,500 V-Bucks, be prepared the face some serious competitive mode means competitive gameplay has been noticeably intense thus far. Anticipate far-range sniper shots and creative attacks with gravity crystals, as well as M.C. Escher-style building wars in the final circles. Time to sharpen up those gun-swapping reflexes. Epic Games will give Fortnite players 1,000 V-Bucks if they ever purchased an in-game loot box, presented within the game as "loot llamas" containing randomized items, as part of a proposed class action lawsuit settlement to be approved later this week. While Fortnite's massively popular battle royale mode has never contained randomized loot boxes, the game's cooperative survival mode, "Save the World," did — at least until 2019 when Epic changed its loot box system to allow players to see the item inside prior to purchase. Now, anyone who purchased a randomized loot box prior to their discontinuation will have the 1,000 V-Bucks (roughly $8) deposited automatically into their accounts over the last few years. In this case, the developer on Monday received confirmation from a judge of preliminary approval for its class action settlement in the Superior Court of North Carolina, which is why Epic says it will begin distributing the rewards today. The move is unusual, as class action lawsuit settlements typically require claimants to file claims to receive benefits. But Epic says it's giving out benefits early because it feels its current position on loot boxes is the right one, and that its players are owed something for having bought randomized ones in the past. Epic will deposit V-Bucks and Rocket League credits automatically "For one, it's the right thing to do and we feel strongly about random item loot boxes. And two, we feel good about the settlement," said Jeffrey Jacobson, a partner at the law firm Faegre Drinker representing Epic, tells The Verge in an interview. "We hope our players agree with us." A final approval hearing is scheduled for May, and lawyers representing both Epic and the plaintiffs expect the settlement to be approved as is. Epic says that while the settlement affects only US players, it's deciding to award the 1,000 V-Bucks to all players of Fortnite globally, so long as they purchased at least one of its randomized loot llamas. The proposed settlement also includes Rocket League players who purchased in-game items like event crates or keys to open loot boxes in the game, and affected players will be given 1,000 credits to be distributed automatically this week in similar fashion. Epic acquired Rocket League developer Psyonix in 2019. Epic says with regard to the scope of the US settlement, the V-Bucks benefit will go to 6.5 million players who bought a random item loot llama in Fortnite and 2.9 million Rocket. League players who purchased an event crate or a key that was used to open a crate. "We stopped offering random item loot boxes like Fortnite Loot Llamas and Rocket League Crates because we realized that some players were repeatedly disappointed by not receiving the random items they hoped for," said Epic CEO Tim Sweeney in a statement to The Verge on Monday. "Players should know upfront what they are paying for when they make in-game purchases." The proposed settlement also provides up to $26.4 million in additional cash and other benefits for Fortnite and Rocket League players "to resolve claims arising from players' loot box purchases." purchases that go beyond the standard settlement terms. This pool includes both sides' attorney fees, according to Epic. But the preliminary settlement also includes a provision that would allow for players who think they were subject to legal harm as part of randomized loot box purchases to argue for money back. This benefit pool is available to minors in California who used their own money, and not the money of a parent or quardian, to purchase Epic loot boxes, which qualifies them for benefits under the state's contract disaffirmation law. It also includes any US Fortnite or Rocket League player who thinks they were subject to legal harm, such as fraud, by purchasing randomized loot boxes from Epic. In each case, a player can submit a claim to be investigated by a neutral administrator, with a potential refund award of up to $50 or 13,500 V-Bucks (or 13,000 Rocket League credits) depending on which benefit the claimant prefers, if the claim is approved. US residents who believe they're entitled to these extra benefits can file claims at www.epiclootboxsettlement.com, which Epic put live Monday afternoon. Epic stopped selling randomized loot boxes in 2019, replacing what were once "V-Buck Llamas" with "X-Ray Llamas" in Fortnite's "Save the World" game mode. At the time, these blind draw llamas ran users 50 V-Bucks (at the time around 50 cents) and contained a random assortment of skins, weapons, or other loot. Later that year, Rocket League removed loot boxes as well, months after Epic acquired its creator Psyonix. According to Jacobson, Epic's lawyer, the class action settlement is "an exclamation point on a position we first announced two years ago." "Players should know upfront what they are paying for when they make in-game purchases." Loot boxes have come under fire from lawmakers and regulators around the world who claim selling random chances at rare or coveted in-game items is akin to gambling. Especially concerning to critics of the practice is that many of the players engaging with loot box systems are children, sometimes using their own money but often with access to a parent or guardian's credit card. Many of the biggest games of the last decade, including entries in Electronic Arts' FIFA franchise and Blizzard's Overwatch, sell blind draw loot boxes for real money, and the business practice has proved lucrative for game developers. In some cases, game companies make more money on in-game microtransactions, like loot boxes constituted illegal gambling and were subject to the country's gaming law, forcing many prominent developers to either discontinue the practice in the country or alter how they allow players to buy and spend in-game currency at the risk of steep fines. Though the US has laws around online gambling, it does not consider loot boxes as such, meaning many games continue to offer them in the US. Bills have been introduced in Congress, such as Sen. Josh Hawley's (R-MO) proposed Protecting Children from Abusive Games Act, but none have passed. (Image credit: Epic Games) Like the majority of online multiplayer games, Fortnite doesn't let you purchase items with actual currency. You need to earn V-Bucks, either through purchasing them or unlocking them, to buy skins, harvesting tools, and other cosmetics items. So how do you get free V-Bucks in Fortnite?Epic Games doesn't offer a lot of free ways to get V-Bucks as they want to save up enough to afford a 1,500 V-Buck skin ($15), let alone more than one without spending much real cash. Here are some tips to make your time building, shooting, and gliding as monetizable as possible. Play through the Battle Passe, one that costs $9.99 for a number of unlockables and a free one that every player gets. Both contain a handful of V-Bucksable as possible. as a reward, although they'll take a lot of time to unlock. Each battle pass lasts around ten weeks before a new one begins. When you login be sure to check the daily and other challenges, both of which will give you points to unlock but not every tier in the free pass comes with a reward. The free pass also nets you far fewer V-Bucks than the paid ones, but we'd caution you before buying Fortnite if you want to actually unlock some V-Bucks. Play Save the World (Image credit: Epic Games) Fortnite: Save the World is the original cooperative game mode that Fortnite launched as before turning into the battle royale juggernaut it is today. In it, you fight zombies for as long as you can, either alone or among friends, in survival where you build and shoot until you get overwhelmed. The issue is that Save the World isn't free despite Epic Game's promises to make it free-to-play. You'll have to purchase the game mode in one of the several packages it comes with, starting at $39.99 on most storefronts including the Xbox One, PlayStation 4, and PC. Save the World becomes freeto-play. Save the World rewards are much better than the ones in the battle royale and can help you save up faster over time. Here are a few things you can do once you have to do is turn the game on. Rewards including different types of cosmetics and the occasional small amount of V-Bucks (150 or $1.50). If you plan on playing Fortnite: Battle Royale it wouldn't hurt to pop over to Save the World. Daily Challenges - Epic has unique challenges to complete every day that will net you different types of rewards, including V-Bucks. Play Storm the Shield - These missions are unlocked as you play through different areas in Save the World's campaign. Each reward you 100 or 150 V-Bucks. Complete to earn V-Bucks. Get a deal in the item shop The obvious answer here is to hop onto Fortnite and buy V-Bucks, either with a credit card or with a pre-purchasable voucher at a store like Target or GameSpot. Every 1,000 V-Bucks is worth about $10 and V-Bucks are available in different amounts. You'll usually have to spend more money if you want one specific item (ie. spend $20 to get a $15 skin). Sometimes the Item Shop, where you'll need to go to buy V-Bucks, will have deals where you get some free V-Bucks if you buy a special skin set or similar item. There aren't a ton of ways to get free V-Bucks in Fortnite, but if you take a look at YouTube and other similar sites you'll see hundreds of videos advertising methods to earn them for free. The majority of these videos are scams, so be wary of anyone trying to get your personal information.
